This past summer I worked for Gavilon at their headquarters in Omaha, Nebraska. During my internship, I contacted Duracade producers across the country to ensure safe stewardship of Duracade, a Syngenta product that helps to prevent rootworm in corn. This product is not approved for trade to the EU or China so it was important that we tracked the production and where it was marketed to in order to ensure US trade integrity or trade issues.

I also reached out to producers across the country who planted Duracade and recommended correct marketing if necessary. I also completed power point and knowledge base presentations and assisted with national software training at Gavilon elevator locations. This next summer I am excited to be working for Gavilon again, but with their new Revenue Risk (crop insurance) sector.
